RTI Plea by Nirma University Law Professor

An RTI filed by ILNU Professor Rohit Moonka, as part of an academic exercise, revealed that 117 Indians are lodged in foreign jails despite having served their prison term. Assistant Professor at Institute of Law, Nirma University, Mr. Moonka had filed an RTI in September requesting the Ministry of External Affairs to provide information on the number of Indians lodged in foreign jails.

The response left Mr. Moonka stunned. He said, "The reply to the RTI revealed that there are 6,004 in prisons across 122 countries. But what is shocking is that there are 117 Indians who have completed their term but have not yet been released from these jails." The RTI revealed that 146 Indians were imprisoned in Bangladesh of which four died while serving their term. Fifty-seven of the remaining prisoners have completed their term but have not been released by Bangladeshi authorities. "There were 211 Indians in Pakistani jails. One of them has not been released despite completion of jail term. In Saudi Arabia, there are 1,400 Indians in jail of which 53 have completed their jail term but have not been released. There are six Indian prisoners in Bahrain who have not been released from the jail," the RTI reply stated.

Various policies or acts such as Forest Rights Act, Right to Information Act, NREGA, etc were also brought into discussion both for their advantages and at the same time the worsening effects of these policies. Various other issues such as corruption, poverty and malnutrition were also discussed about, which if not

'Who makes law for whom in a stratified society' Dr. Vidyut Joshi, (Former Vice-Chancellor, Bhavnager University & Emirites Professor, ILNU)

As a part of the guest lecture held on the 11th of October 2013, Emeritus Professor Dr. Vidyut Joshi delivered an expert lecture on the issue of 'Who makes law for whom in a stratified society' He said, "real teaching takes place only through a dialogue" and accordingly he attempted relentlessly to keep the session interactive.

He began by explaining the heterogeneous character of the society, where in a way every human was like everybody else and this ground of commonality is the basis for the formation of all laws. Providing an interesting definition of stratification as "putting different people differently and same people equally" he went on to classify the methods of stratification into 2 categories namely the closed stratification system which is a rigid system with low social mobility, based on ascribed and achieved statuses.

Using this background he went on to define the role of the Indian Constitution and the legal system as aiming to transform India from a closed society to an open society. This transformation was illustrated creatively with real life examples of the emergence of Dena Bank and the movement of different castes to claiming political power. Also the concept of positive discrimination to uplift the socially backward classes to a level of equality to enable them to successfully compete for achieved statuses was discussed with reference to reservations in the field of education and workplace. The students posed several questions passionately on this issue, as they could connect it well with their lives and the discussion became even more fruitful considering the aptness and practical outlook of the answers.

The discussion ended by the mention of the emerging sociological concept of "clast" in extension of the idea that class will in the long-run remain a social group in India but not as an occupational group. Prof. Joshi ended by saying that "a full open society can never exist because of the emotional attachments of the people to their language, culture, religion etc."
